

David Mamet

Wikipedia

David Mamet has a connection to Northwestern University through his wife, Bernadine Dohrn, who is a professor of law there, as well as through the Northwestern student newspaper, The Daily Northwestern, which has published articles about his work and has a tag dedicated to him.

While Mamet himself did not attend the university, Northwestern's Theatre and Interpretation Center has produced staged readings of his plays, like "Race".

Direct Connections:

- Spouse:
David Mamet's wife, Bernadine Dohrn, is an associate professor of law at Northwestern University.
- Student Publications:
The Daily Northwestern, the university's student newspaper, has featured articles about Mamet and has a dedicated tag for his works.

Academic & Artistic Connections:

- University Activities:
Northwestern's Theatre and Interpretation Center has hosted staged readings of his plays, such as "Race".

- Academic Studies:
Mamet's works, like the play Oleanna and the film House of Games, are studied in academic contexts, potentially including at institutions like Northwestern.

Other Notable Information:

- Chicago Roots:
Mamet has strong ties to the Chicago area, where Northwestern is located. He grew up there and later returned to establish the St. Nicholas Theatre Company and work at the University of Chicago, according to Dartmouth Journeys.
- Broadway & Film:
Mamet is a renowned American playwright, screenwriter, and director. He is known for works such as Glengarry Glen Ross, American Buffalo, and The Untouchables.

<https://dailynorthwestern.com/2013/01/23/uncategorized/why-we-cant-talk-about-race/>

<https://www.theintermountain.com/uncategorized/2025/06/mamet-hard-work-and-speaking-out/>

<https://www.steppenwolf.org/artists/david--mamet/>

<https://www.upstartfilmcollective.com/portfolios/jcharnick/mamet-museum/old-interview.html>

<https://www.goodmantheatre.org/artists/david-mamet/>